THOUSANDS MOURN SARASOHN

HUGE CROWD AT FUNERAL OF HEBREW PHILANTHROPIST.

East Side Streets Blocked for Hours-Po-Hee Check Rush to Touch Coffin, and Open Path for Hearse and Carriages Noted Hebrews as Pallbearers.

In anticipation of a crush like that which occurred at Rabbi Joseph's funeral several years ago, a detail of 100 policemen under Capt. Shaw kept order yesterday morning at the funeral of Kastyel H. Sarasohn, Jewish editor and philanthropist. There was onte of twice the police had to draw their clubs to keep the crowd under control. The crowd was one of the greatest ever gathered on the East Side.

The Sarasohn residence is at 185 East Broadway, over the office of the Jewish Daily News, Mr. Sarasohn's paper. This is opposite Seward Park, and the vacant space affords a fine opportunity for a crowd. Even before the police arrived, at 10 o'clock. this area was jammed. The hearse and the few carriages which were to follow the body to the Norfolk street synagogue, where the main services were held, had to make their way through a route hewed by the police. As the crowd grew it stopped make an opening. The services at the house were comparatively brief. The coffin was carried to the hearse, and the procession made its first stage to 231 East Broadway, the Jewish Sheltering Home, which Mr. Sarasohn founded. The police had been warned of the orthodox Hebrew superstition which makes it an honor to touch the coffin of a rabbi or holy man. They were prepared for a rush, therefore, and when it came they met it with drawn clubs and managed to hold the line.

Behind the hearse marched 120 boys of the Talmud Thora school, another of the them the crowd fell in. Newsboys, with copies of the Yiddish papers under their arms; aged, bearded patriarchs, still wearing the high boots and fur caps of Russian custom; women with their heads covered in accordance with the requirements of their faith, conventionally dressed young Jews and Jewesses of the second American generation—all fought for the honor of marching behind the hearse.

The services at the home were brief. Rabbi Jaches read a part of the prayers for the dead, and Jacob H. Schiff spoke briefly. Then, after another struggle with the mob, the coffin was replaced in the hearse and the procession moved on to the Norfolk street synagogue. late philanthropist's charities, and behind were struggling for admission. Special places had been assigned to Mr. Sarasohn's intimate friends and to prominent Jews from all over the city who had gathered to honor the friend of their poor. When these had been seated the crowd was admitted. It packed the building in two minutes. The police threw themselves on the living wall behind and forced the crowd track. It packed the streets in all directions. back. It packed the streets in all direc-tions for nearly two blocks. The services lasted for an hour and a half. It took the funeral procession.

At the services frequent mention was made of the fact that Mr. Sarasohn was almost the father of Yiddish as a written language. Before he founded his newspapers the Yiddish dialect had hardly been months, gross earnings are shown to have increased $8,789,094, with net earnings $1,205,246.

In his report to the stockholders President Robinson says that in this period 13,129 tons of new 75 and 80 pound steel rails were

The honorary pallbearers were Jacob H. Schiff, Henry Rice, G. P. Solomon, Louis Marshall, Dr. Lee K. Frankel, Nathan Bijur, Kaufman Mandel, Philip Cowen, Samuel Dorf and Joseph H. Cohen.

The man was followed and was seen to have no wagon. When he got around the corner he was seized and turned over to Policeman Freghery and Detective Caddell, who took him to the Elizabeth street stailon. He described himself as Joseph Fread, a Russian painter, 20 years old, of 323 De Kalb avenue, Brooklyn.

Fread wore an Adams Express Company cap, but lacked the rest of the driver's uniform. It was said at the office of the express company that six complaints had been made of similar thefts. It is expected that there will be a score of complainants when Fread is brought into court to-morrow. He was arraigned before Magistrate Flammer in the First district court yesterday afternoon and held for examination. The swindle is not a new one. wear worth about $50. The porter told the Hearing at the Tombs on Tuesday-Magistrate Barlow Rules That Booths May Stay-Ommen Repeats That He Will Issue Warrapts if They Don't Vanish.

Capt. Hodgins of the Oak street station oplied to Magistrate Flammer in the Tomba olice court yesterday for summonses for wenty downtown saloonkeepers who have booths in their saloons.

"This is too early in the proceedings to tell what is going to happen," said Capt. Hodgins, "but you can say that the proprietors of some of the best known saloon downtown and particularly along Park row will be kept guessing." The subpænas the captain secured are Shire of the East Thirtyfifth street station. The captain wanted titions and booths in their places constithe right to create a new voting trust tuted a violation of the Excise law. The Magistrate made a tour of inspection of the saloons with the captain and his probationary officer, Lee, after the closing of court on Thursday. He made a diagram of all the saloons he visited, showing all he partitions.

When the cases came up yesterday after-

When the cases came up yesterday after-noon the Magistrate's opinion differed from that given by Magistrate Ommen. Magis-trate Barlow held that it depended upon the good faith of the saloonkeeper whether the partition constituted a violation of law or not. He dismissed all of the cases.
The thirty-seven saloonkeepers from the Tenderloin who were ordered to take all booths and other obstructions from their barrooms appeared of were represented at Jefferson Market police court yesterday. A dozen of them had made no alterations, but nobody was arrested. District Attorney Jerome wasn't on hand. After a wrangle the hearing went on without him. Detectives Finley and Minninger told the Magistrate that they had visited the saloons, and about two-thirds of them had compiled with the law. These were crossed complied with the law. These were crossed off the list. Then Lawyer David New-perger, who appeared for twenty-one liquor ders, began to make excuses for some them and ask for more time. Why, you can pull down a whole house exclaimed Magistrate Ommen.

"Do I understand that your Honor is clear as to the propriety of issuing warrants in these cases?" asked the lawyer. "I certainly am," declared the Magiswell, then, I declare that you have no right to do so. The statute in so far as it deals with the action of Magistrates refers only to the actual sale of liquor—trafficking, as the law says. This has to do with selling on Sunday or after hours. The question of booths and side entrances is one for the Supreme Court to settle."
